Dear President Biden and Director Walensky:

We write to strongly urge you to extend and strengthen the federal CDC eviction moratorium beyond its current expiration date of Wednesday, June 30, 2021. We appreciate your swift action earlier this year to extend the moratorium past its original expiration date and call on you to once again take action to prevent a historic wave of evictions and keep renters safely in their homes.

Without further action, in just eight days, the CDC moratorium will expire, and millions of renters will once again face the threat of eviction. Evictions take lives and push households deeper into poverty, impacting everything from health outcomes to educational attainment. As workers and families across the country are just beginning to recoup from the trauma and economic hardship caused by the COVID-19 pandemic, we must take all necessary action to protect them from becoming unhoused during this vulnerable time.

The Biden Administration can do this by extending and significantly strengthening the current CDC moratorium to ensure the protections are automatic, self-executing, and that tenants are not expected to navigate a myriad of overly burdensome eligibility requirements in order to safely remain in their homes. The eviction crisis is a racial justice issue. According to data collected from the Census Bureau’s Household Pulse Survey conducted May 12-24, Black, Latino, Asian, and Indigenous households are more likely to report being behind on their rental payments1. By extending the moratorium and incorporating these critical improvements to protect vulnerable renters, we can work to curtail the eviction crisis disproportionately impacting our communities of color.

In December, Congress provided $46 billion in emergency rental assistance in the American Rescue Plan Act, and state and local governments are still working on designing, scaling, and distributing aid to help renters dig out of rental debt that they incurred through no fault of their own. Millions of renters are still struggling to access this aid. State and local governments need time, resources, and new guidance to deliver the rescue aid Congress provided.

According to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, an estimated 6 million renter households are behind on their rent and at risk of eviction2. While vaccination rates are up and COVID-19 caseloads are down in many communities, those communities with lower vaccination rates and higher COVID-19 cases tend to be the same as those with renters at heightened risk of eviction when the moratorium expires. Allowing the moratorium to expire before vaccination rates increase in marginalized communities could lead to increased spread of, and deaths from, COVID-19.

There has been overwhelming support for extending and strengthening the federal eviction moratorium from housing advocates, health care providers, policymakers, and Members of Congress alike. The impact of the federal moratorium cannot be overstated, and the need to strengthen and extend it is an urgent matter of health, racial, and economic justice. We ask that you take urgent action to protect millions of families across the country.

Sincerely,

Ayanna Pressley
